

Yes, it is important to the scientific community. This is because the work is able to articulate the major needs assessment of mental healthcare among inmates with respect to previous findings and the current status, and made the requisite recommendations.

the title is suitable. This is because it contains all the variables of interest in the study, but I suggest a mild adjustment to the title by adding 'Madison' before 'County Jail' to indicate the particular county jail where the study was carried out.

the abstract is comprehensive enough. This is because it contains the major components of every good abstract which include; the population of study, the methods and the outcome. It is simply the abridged version of the study and gives the summary of the work in a glance.

The manuscript is good, and the great efforts which were expended in reviewing different works in this area of study are deeply appreciated, but I think that the introduction section should contain a theory upon which the study is built, and the inclusion and exclusion criteria for the study should be indicated.

The references are sufficiently sufficient, but I suggest more recent works of 2021 to 2023 be added
