

Yes, the manuscript is important as it addresses AI's role in health workforce development, a timely and significant issue for the scientific community.

Authors should add 3–5 more recent references (last 3–4 years), properly formatted and numbered.

Relevance of the issue to topical debates in healthcare and workforce planning.

Nucleus coverage of topics like education, management, ethics, and equity.

Presentation of clear international views and their implications for practice and policy.

Recommendations for Revision:

While the paper is a valuable contribution, I suggest acceptance on the following terms of revision:

Recent Citations: Include at least 3–5 more recent scholarly articles (published in the last 3–4 years) to enhance the literature base and situate the discussion within current research.

Formatting: Ensure the references and manuscript conform to the mandated journal formatting guidelines.

Numbering: Number correctly and consistently the references in the text.