

The introductory paragraph of the literature review section needs revision to clearly indicate that this section offers a comprehensive overview of the relevant literature on the topic. It should also provide a smooth transition for the reader into the following paragraphs. Additionally, the literature review should be one to two pages long and may include two to three other subtopics, possibly incorporating some of the original subtopics. Before the "Implications for Practice" section, the author should ensure that additional subtopics are included. Currently, the article goes from "Literature Review" to the "Implications for Practice". Overall, the article is well written and has significant potential; with some restructuring, its readability can be greatly improved.
