This seems to be novel with the selected country and an issue that does not have an exact parallel in the US. This could also spill over into other countries with immigration as peoples tend to continue what they know and often have distrust in Western medical systems.

Very strong abstract. If any additions are done here be sure to note that it is already at 250 words so cutting down may be needed at that point.

The sections are good. I think the subsections are good but they may be a distraction to readers of the journal if they don't follow the journal guidelines.

Most of the references that are more than 10 years old are referencing sources that will not have changed and are the original source. Other research that are more than 10 years old are most likely due to a lack of research in the specific area and the inability for other research to be relevant to the topic at hand.

Outside of sources possibly being 10 years or older there should be no real issues. The age of the sources also shouldn't be a issue outside of overly particular reviewers and they should be considering the niche that this paper is reviewing. Otherwise, an excellent paper.
