The manuscript holds considerable significance within the domains of social work, social welfare policy, and education, representing a valuable contribution to these fields. Nonetheless, it would greatly benefit from a comprehensive editing process, particularly in relation to the abstract and the main body of the paper.

The abstract requires expansion to approximately 200 words, encompassing a comprehensive description of the article's purpose, a clear definition of the main concept, and an outline of the methodology employed.

Use direct quotes only when the original phrasing is particularly powerful, unique, or essential to your argument. A good guideline is to keep direct quotations to about 10-15% of the total text. Also, avoid starting a sentence with a quote, and remember to include page numbers when you do quote.

After the abstract, the article should include both an introduction and a literature review section. Within the literature review, subtopics such as "The Relationship Between the National Association of Social Workers and the Council on Social Work Education" can be included as sub-subtopics. The remaining sections of the manuscript are well-organized, demonstrating your commitment to clarity and structure. Additionally, it would be beneficial to include a section titled "Implications for Practice," as this would further enhance the overall clarity and organization of your work. Furthermore, to enhance the clarity and professionalism of the "Suggested Experimental Classroom Activities and Assignments" sections, it is imperative to convert the bullet points into narrative format. An excessive use of bullet points can dilute their intended impact, resulting in a document that may appear cluttered and unprofessional. To remedy this issue, one should consider rewriting the content into complete paragraphs, transforming lengthy bulleted lists into tables, or developing separate, more focused bulleted lists. This approach will significantly improve the overall readability and presentation of the material.

The article should include additional references. It is best practice for a research paper to ground every paragraph in the relevant and current literature by including several references.
